"Alternative Avenues of Engagement with North Korea and for Peace in Northeast Asia"

By Ralph Cossa, Pacific Forum, Centre for Strategic & International Studies, Hawaii

Wednesday, October 24th 3:30-5:00 pm Conference room #120, C.K. Choi Building 1855 West Mall

Abstract: Over time, countries have tried various approaches for solving problems with North Korea. Engagement with North Korea has consisted of bilateral negotiations, multilateral formats like the Six-Party Talks, track two discussions with experts, and meetings with non-governmental organizations. Countries even tried to get at difficult issues like nuclear weapons disarmament by discussing other issues like food aid or energy. Just this year, we have seen some of these alternative pathways to engaging North Korea. Japan and North Korea talked via their respective Red Cross organizations. There was a track two dialogue between U.S. think tank experts and North Korea officials in Singapore in late July. Ralph Cossa, President, Pacific Forum CSIS, has seen and analyzed many of these events, and the Pacific Forum also organizes events bringing together experts and officials from the countries involved in Northeast Asia. Come listen to a discussion on the ways countries try to engage North Korea and bring about peace in Northeast Asia.
